Families with a speech disordered child often face a financial burden due to the high cost of speech therapy and other needed treatments. In fact, a survey published in Public Health Reports found that 40% of American families with children with special needs report feeling the strain of the financial toll that those healthcare needs cause. The survey further reported that children with disabilities are more likely to grow up in single-parent households, and that those parents often hold lower-paying jobs.

Childhood Apraxia of Speech

(An “apraxia” is defined as the “inability to perform particular purposive actions as a result of brain injury”.)

A population estimate based on clinical referral data suggests that CAS occurs in 1-2 children per 1,000 (0.1%-0.2%; Shriberg et al., 1997) and is found in 3.4%-4.3% of the children referred for speech disorders (Delaney & Kent, 2004). On average, idiopathic CAS affects more boys than girls by a ratio of 2 or 3:1 (Hall, Jordan, & Robin, 1993; Lewis, Freebairn, Hansen, Taylor et al., 2004).
